ASK FIRST → DRAFT → CHECK IT → REFINE

1 START RIGHT

before it writes

"Ask me questions before you start."
It finds what's missing instead of guessing.

"This is for [who]. They care about [what]."
It writes to your reader, not to everyone.

"Here's an example I like. Match it."
One example beats a paragraph of description.

"Here's everything in my head. Organize it."
Brain dump first. Messy notes beat a blank start.

2 SHAPE IT

while it writes

"Give me 3 versions: short, warm, and bold."
Pick the best one instead of settling.

"Make it as short as it can be without losing anything."
A hard limit becomes a target, so it pads to fill it.

"Make it engaging and easy to read."
Short lines, plain words, a clear next step.

"Write it like a text, not an email."
Sets the tone in six words.

3 CHECK IT

before you send

"Do a missed opportunities check."
What did I leave out that would help?

"Run a continuity and consistency check."
Names, numbers, and tone match all the way through.

"Flag anything you guessed."
Separates real facts from filler.

"Do a fair housing check."
Describe the home, never who should live there.

4 REFINE IT

when it's close

"Keep everything else. Only change [this]."
Stops it from rewriting what already works.

"Rate it 1 to 10, then make it a 10."
It critiques itself, then fixes the gaps.

"Read it as a skeptical buyer. What's weak?"
Finds the holes before a client does.

"Save this as a template I can reuse."
Do the work once, use it every week.

STACK THEM

"Ask me questions before you start. Make it engaging and easy to read. Then do a missed opportunities check."

NEVER PASTE IN

Social Security numbers, bank or loan details, or anything a client asked you to keep private.
